I went to a concert Saturday night featuring the band Bearfoot. I'd never heard of the band or a single song of theirs before the concert so I was a little so-so about the ticket I was holding. However, Bearfoot turned out to be a really nice surprise.

They feature a combination of Americana and bluegrass music and have as one of their members the best mandolin player I've ever heard. His name is Jason Norris and he picked that mandolin like he was Jimi Hendrix doing things I didn't know could be done to the instrument. The crowd ate it up too. His electric performance enthralled everyone. I'd pay to see Bearfoot again just to see him repeat that performance.

Mike Mickelson who sang and played guitar also added a country flavor. He had a wide vocal range and is very much at home on stage. He was probably the most natural behind a mic. I also liked his old school style of holding his guitar.

There were three women in the group and they all took turns singing and were masters of their instruments. And that was the thing about this group, they all were awesome musicians and provided a lot of variety to their song set.

If you want to check out the band just go to www.bearfootband.com. The group was gracious by doing a meet and greet after the show which meant I got all their autographs to add to my collection. Someday, I'm going to have to open my own museum. I hope when I buy tickets to groups I don't know, I'm always lucky enough to find one as good as these guys.
